Administrative History: Waterford County was one of the earliest counties established by the writ of John, King of England and Wales and Lord of Ireland. In the medieval period a County Sheriff appointed by royal authority administered the County. The County Sheriff was assisted in the administration of the County by the Grand Jury, the members of whom he chose, although later in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries there was a limited franchise. Local Government in Ireland was reorganised under the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898. Under the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898 the Grand Juries ceased to exist and the functions of the Grand Jury were taken over by Waterford County Council. The local electorate elected the members of Waterford County Council to the Council. In 1898 the local electorate consisted of the parliamentary electorate and also women and peers. The parliamentary electorate were property owners, occupiers of property who paid rates direct or through the landowner as an addition to rent and any lodger paying more than £10 rent per annum. The records provide details of the move from the Grand Jury system of local government and trace the early developments of Waterford County Council and its services. The files and volumes of accounts, registers and other records in this collection reflect the broad range of functions carried out by Waterford County Council's elected representatives and staff.

Content and Structure

Scope and Content: Papers relating to the early years of the Council where all functions were controlled from the County Secretary's Office. The collection contains official correspondence, files, account books, notices and registers from Waterford County Council. The collection contains records of local elections from 1900-1960 including registers of electors and nomination papers (WCC/GNA/20-30). Correspondence in the collection relates to the operation of local government under Dáil Éireann (WCC/GNA/131). The collection includes records of attempts to introduce the 1934 Town and Regional Planning Act and on the introduction of the Planning Act, 1963 and the first Development Plans for towns in County Waterford (WCC/GNA/168-174). The collection includes detailed information on early bridge and road building in County Waterford and the provision of water supplies to Waterford County. The records of the County Waterford War Pensions Committee (WCC/GNA/331) and records of damage to roads and bridges and the costs of repairs during the War of Independence (WCC/GNA/332) provide information on the activities of the IRA brigades during the War of Independence. Contains also the records for the establishment of the County Fire Service in 1940 during the Second World War (WCC/GNA/380-382) documenting the difficulty in supplying the firefighters during the Second World War. Includes also records of the building of Ardkeen Sanitorium as a tuberculosis hospital (WCC/GNA/266) and records of the proceedings of the County Waterford Tuberculosis Committee (WCC/GNA/267).

INTRODUCTION

Waterford County was one of the earliest counties established by the writ of John, King of England and Wales and Lord of Ireland. In the medieval period a County Sheriff appointed by royal authority administered the County. The County Sheriff was assisted in the administration of the County by the Grand Jury, the members of whom he chose, although later in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries there was a limited franchise.

Local Government in Ireland was reorganised under the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898. The Grand Juries that had been in existence from the thirteenth century in Waterford County were abolished and replaced by County Councils and Rural District Councils.

Under the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898 the Grand Juries ceased to exist and the functions of the Grand Jury were taken over by Waterford County Council. The local electorate elected the members of Waterford County Council to the Council. In 1898 the local electorate consisted of the parliamentary electorate and also women and peers. The parliamentary electorate were property owners, occupiers of property who paid rates direct or through the landowner as an addition to rent and any lodger paying more than £10 rent per annum.

The records in the following Descriptive List provide details of the move from the Grand Jury system of local government and trace the early developments of the Council and its services. The records for this Descriptive List came from the County Secretary's Office in Arus Brugh, Dungarvan and detail the early years of Waterford County Council. It should be noted, however, that this collection is not a complete collection of the early records of Waterford County Council and early records relating to specific sections will be listed with the records from that section in further Descriptive Lists.

These records were sent to storage at Lismore Library Headquarters in 1996 and were moved to Dungarvan to the newly built Archive Store in 1999.

This Descriptive List is titled Waterford County Council General Administration and reflects the early form of the Council where all functions were controlled from the County Secretary's Office. In later years, the services of the Council expanded and sections were developed to handle the growing services of the Council. As a result, there will be some overlap between these records and later Descriptive Lists for specific sections.

The arrangement of the collection has been carried out with due consideration to the guidance in Guidelines for the Development of Local Authority Archives Services. The collection has been divided into two sections:

- A. The Workings of Waterford County Council – this section details the administration of Waterford County Council and how the Council staff and elected members functioned.
- B. Services Provided by Waterford County Council – this section provides information on the many and varied services provided by Waterford County Council.

Within these sections the collection is broken down according to the function of the records e.g. files on elections have been placed together. The files have not been altered and reflect the manner in which the files were first set up. As a result, the files, in some cases, contain records from the Grand Jury administration, which were used by Waterford County Council in the continuation of functions such as, bridge building and maintenance. This arrangement allows researchers an insight into how Waterford County Council took on functions from the Grand Jury and later took on health and social welfare functions from the abolished Poor Law Unions (with some difficulties WCC/GNA/267) as well as the functions of the Rural District Councils abolished in 1925. Within each section the files are in date order.

Names and placenames appear in the spelling in which they appear in the record itself. Names or dates that were not clearly decipherable or indicated have been surrounded in square brackets. In a number of cases Waterford Council Council is identified only as WCC, otherwise all names or organisations are fully spelt out. Occasionally, staff names appear on the records in Irish and this is not altered in the description. Please consult the Archivist if you have any questions about any description given.

The files and volumes of accounts, registers and other records in this collection reflect the broad range of functions carried out by Waterford County Council's elected representatives and staff. They allow the people of Waterford to trace the work of their elected representatives and further, to trace the early developments in services such as water supplies or the building of roads in the County. Due to the extensive contacts of Waterford County Council there are numerous mentions of the people of Waterford County throughout these records. Occasionally, due to the confidential nature of the information supplied by those members of the public some records have been closed to public access (WCC/GNA/268/269). Waterford County Council holds copyright for these records.

Further information on the work of Waterford County Council can be found within the County Archives Service in collections with the WCC code e.g. The Minutes of the Meetings of Waterford County Council WCC/1/. Reference works relating to the Local Government Board and the Department of Local Government and Public Health who oversaw the work of Waterford County Council and also detailing legislation impacting on the County Council, in particular the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898 are available in Waterford County Archive Service WCC/REF/.

A history of Waterford County Council can be found in Comhairle Phoirt Lairge 1899-1999 by Brian McNally and Maurice McHugh, edited by Tom Keith and Donald Brady. Further information on County Councils throughout Ireland can be found in other County Archive Services or in the Local Authority Archive publication Local Authority Archives in Ireland and the archives of the Local Government Board and the Government Departments responsible for Local Authorities in the National Archives of Ireland.
